Dear Archbishop Torkom:

Greetings from Washington! It was good to be with you last week at the consultation, as they called it.

I am enclosing two copies of a brief press release which I prepared for the Armenian press. I was waiting for photos I had taken to be developed. I just received them today. They were not too good, but better than nothing. I am enclosing the more appropriate ones of yourself. I am having additional copies of the one showing your profile (unfortunately, the other one is slightly blurred) to send to The Reporter, The Observer and the Mirror-Spectator.

I am also enclosing an article by Marjorie Hyer in the Washington Post which appeared today.

With kindest regards, I am

175 Attend Bicentennial Party

Church-State Ties Worry Religious Leaders

By Marjorie Hyer
Washington Post Staff Writer

The assemblage of religious leaders who gathered in the nation's capital last week to probe the religious dimensions of the Bicentennial was one of the most religiously diverse gatherings in the nation's history.

It was also one of the most nervous.

The 175 men and women who attended the Bicentennial consultation on "Religion and the American Experience" had a number of reasons for their nervousness.

Some came from denominations or groups—such as the Wisconsin Evangelical Lutheran Synod—which traditionally look askance at ecumenical involvement.

Others found the relative opulence of the consultation setting out of harmony with organized religion's current expressed concern for the world's poor.

"The church has no business holding conferences at the Washington Hilton," grumbled the Rev. Fred Morris, a former United Methodist missionary in Brazil.

But the area that gave the most problems was the question of the relationship of church and state.

The two-day consultation was jointly sponsored by an independent New York-based organization called Project FORWARD '76 and the American Revolution Bicentennial Administration. The latter is an official agency of the U.S. government, funded by the federal treasury.

For religious leaders with consciences finely tuned to the question of church-state separation, this caused extreme uneasiness.

"I find it very ironic that we call a conference on religious liberty—where we come together to talk about separation of church and state—and find that we can't put it on without tax funds," said Dr. James E. Wood Jr., executive director of the Baptist Joint Committee on Public Affairs.

The "tax funds" that helped finance the bicentennial consultation of religious leaders were minimal—but

Each church organization participant paid a $75 registration fee. Dr. R. H. Edwin Espy, who heads Project FORWARD '76, acknowledged that the four banquet-style meals of the consultation plus the night in the hotel used up most of the $75.

An expected deficit of $25,000—for overhead and a hefty armload of books supplied each registrant—would be split 50-50 between Project FORWARD and the Bicentennial administration, Dr. Espy said.

Although there were plenty of speeches on the Consultation program, there were no business sessions, no resolutions, no attempts to derive a consensus from the wide range of religious experiences represented.

The resolute abstention from any attempts at consensus, in fact, was one of

West Virginia Bishop Retires

Religious News Service

MARTINSBURG, W. Va. — The Rt. Rev. Wilburn C. Campbell, 64, who has been bishop of the Episcopal Diocese of West Virginia for 20 years, has announced his retirement effective Jan. 1.

His statement came as a shock to the annual diocesan convention. A diocesan official said the announcement from the bishop was "a surprise even to his wife."

In his brief statement, the prelate commented that he felt that Bishop Coadjutor Robert P. Atkinson, who has served in that position two years, has been doing such a "magnificent job" that he is ready to take over as diocesan bishop.

the conditions of the invitation to the meeting.

One common thread that did emerge was a determination not to let religion, in the flush of Bicentennial enthusiasm, become the servant of the state.

"The institution of religion must always be the critic of the nation," said Rabbi Balfour Brickner of the Union of American Hebrew Congregations.

Teen-age Rules Set

Religious News Service

SAN ANTONIO—The San Antonio Catholic Archdiocese has announced regulations restricting marriages for teenagers.

The policy was adopted in the light of mounting evidence that U.S. teen-agers are incapable of making and sustaining the kind of commitment necessary to fulfill what the church considers essential requirements for the sacrament of Christian marriage, according to the Rev. Edmond Carmody, vice chancellor and auditor of the Marriage Tribunal.

Under the regulations, no plans may be made for marriage when either partner will not have attained the 18th birthday on the proposed date of marriage.

When either partner is between 18 or 19 at the projected date of the wedding, the priest may not proceed with marriage plans until he has completed interviews with their parents.

A written resume will then be prepared containing information on motives for marriage, length and stability of courtship, family background, parent attitudes, stability of respective families, financial status, spiritual status and psychological maturity of prospective couple.

"In the Judeo-Christian tradition, we must never use God to justify the nation," said the Rev. Thomas F. Stransky, head of the Paulist order in the United States.

Many, if not most, of the participants reflected a determination to keep celebrations of the nation's Bicentennial from becoming an exercise in civil religion—a substitution of the state for God as an object of worship.

For some, the announcement by John W. Warner, head of the American Revolution Bicentennial Administration, that President Ford intends to proclaim a national day of prayer later this year, was unsettling.

"That's not the job of the President," maintained Dr. Wood.

According to Dr. Espy, consultation registrants represented more than 50 denominations or religious communities and 40 religion-related organizations.

Protestant, Catholic, Jewish, Hindu, Moslem, Mormon, Buddhist—"there's never been convened a meeting representing as wide a spectrum of the religious community in this country for any purpose," Dr. Espy declared.

For all the protestations against civil religion, it was not spiritual impulse, but a red-white-and-blue-laced invitation that brought them all together.

Press Aides Are Hired by Tucker, Mayor

By Paul W. Valentine
Washington Post Staff Writer

Mayor Walter E. Washington and D.C. City Council Chairman Sterling Tucker have each hired a professional news reporter to help beef up their respective press relations efforts in city hall.

Susan Truitt, 37, former radio and television reporter for WTTG (Channel 5) and other local stations, has accepted a temporary, $98-a-day post as a special assistant in the mayor's public affairs office.

And at the other end of the hall on the fifth floor of the District Building, Tucker has hired former WTOP radio and television newsman Alan F. Grip, 39, as a $21,800-a-year permanent special assistant to be both press officer and internal chief of staff.

Mrs. Truitt's 60-day assignment, which began May 19, comes after sporadic complaints by some reporters that many city department and agency chiefs are inaccessible or evasive.

Mrs. Truitt said yesterday her principal job is to devise ways of increasing the exposure of agency chiefs on radio and television "so that they can tell their story (and) explain how their agencies function and what they've accomplished."

This will be done, she said, both by providing technical guidance to the agency chiefs and by notifying local radio and TV stations of their availability.

"For one reason or another, we feel the community is really not aware of a lot of the city's departmental programs," said Sam Eastman, the mayor's public affairs director and Mrs. Truitt's boss.

He said he envisions Mrs. Truitt's efforts leading to increased appearances of city officials on call-in programs, talk shows and interview programs. Eastman's office already has one part-time employee, Benny Singleton, assigned to the effort, "but we just haven't taken a fresh look at it in some time."

Mrs. Truitt's official job description says her functions also include advising agency chiefs on the "need for information to overcome lack of understanding, indifference and adverse publicity based on erroneous information (and to advise) on the most advantageous timing and thrust of major news announcements."

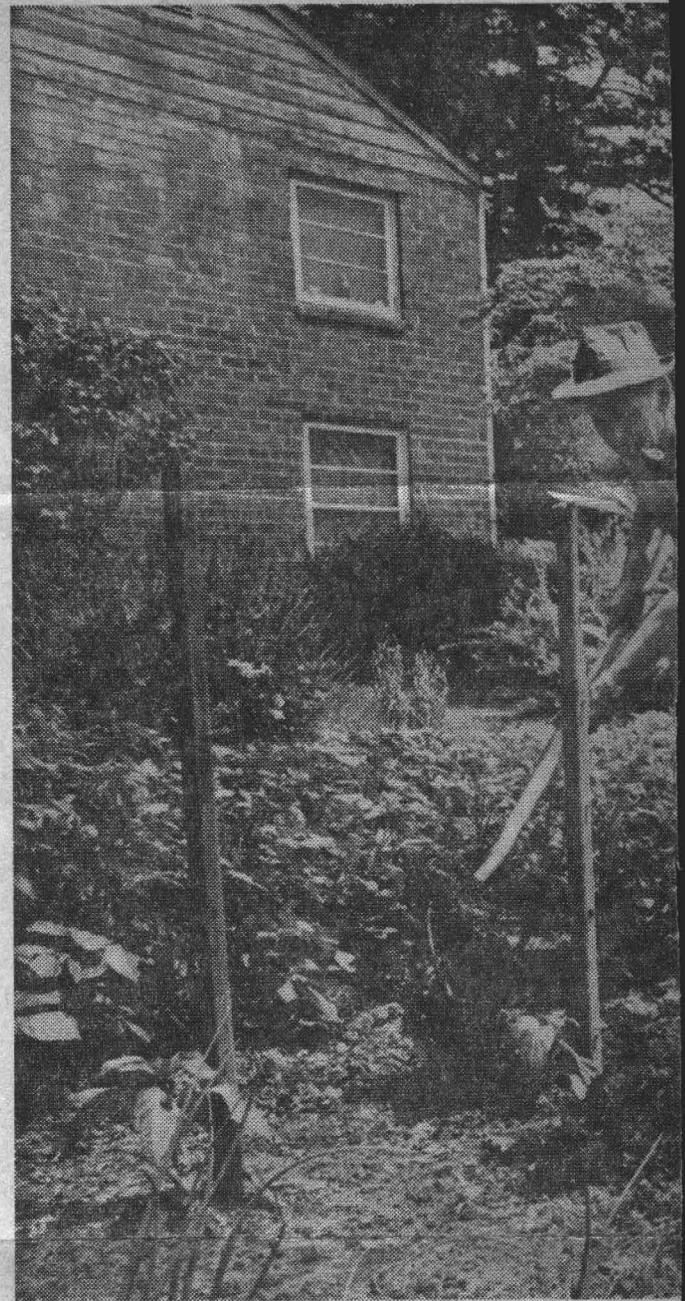

Grip said yesterday he spends about half his time and effort as Tucker's press officer and half as a "sort of chief of staff running the day-to-day operations in the office."

He said Tucker found that so much newsworthy information developed from the Council chairman's office that "he needed someone to work on his behalf with the press . . . He needed that bridge, just like the mayor or anyone else who makes a lot of news."

Grip, like Mrs. Truitt, brings a certain technical savvy to the District Building about news broadcast times, deadlines, prior notice requirements for press conferences and other media mechanics.

"I know most of the reporters by name in this city," said Grip. "... I know the drill."

In response to speculation among some District Building officials that Tucker hired Grip to help groom Tucker for a possible mayoral candidacy in 1978, Grip said, "When we were talking there was no mention of needing more exposure because of his political future . . . He just felt a requirement had to be met to deal with the media . . . I haven't asked what his political plans are"

NEWS RELEASE.....

WASHINGTON, DC - Archbishop Torkom Manoogian, Primate of the Eastern Diocese of the Armenian Church of America, was among the 200 prominent religious and lay leaders who participated in a two-day national bicentennial consultation in Washington recently.

The "National Bicentennial Consultation on Religion and the American Experience" was co-sponsored by the American Revolution Bicentennial Administration, a federal agency, and Project FORWARD '76, an ad hoc religious organization made up of all faiths.

Other distinguished participants included Archbishop Iakovas of the Greek Orthodox Archdiocese of North and South America; the Most Reverend Joseph L. Bernardin, Archbishop of Cincinnati and President of the National Council of Catholic Bishops; the Honorable John W. Warner, Administrator of the American Revolution Bicentennial Administration, and R. H. Edwin Espey, Chairman of Project FORWARD '76.

The central purpose of the consultation was to help insure recognition of the important role of religion in the Bicentennial and to acquaint leaders of the religious community with opportunities for participation in this landmark observance.

In his introductory remarks, Mr. Espey pointed out that never before in the nation's history have representatives of such diverse religious communities, numbering over 50, gathered in similar consultation.

"We see the Bicentennial," he continued, "as a unique moment in our history, challenging us to look at the past from the perspective of the present in order to build a future consistent with our ideals and responsive to the reality of the new century. An exploration by religiously committed persons has unique importance for such a process of reassessment."

Some of the subjects which were explored in a series of seminars were:

1. What does it mean, within our diverse religious groups, to be ~~the~~ Americans, citizens of this Republic?

2. In what ways have the thought and practice of our religions been affected by the American experience?

3. How have our religious communities influenced our national life?

4. How should we judge and shape this mutual influence in order to insure that its future course will be beneficial to both religion and the nation?

Other participants from the Washington Armenian community were Bishop Papken Varjabedian, Diocesan Legate in the Nation's Capital; Colonel George Juskalian, Chairman of the Legate's Council and a member of the Diocesan Council, and Mrs. Mary Broussalian.

New York, New York 10016

Dear Archbishop Manoogian:

We write to invite you to attend the national Bicentennial Conference on Religious Liberty to be held April 25-30, 1976, in Philadelphia, under the auspices of the Metropolitan Christian Council of Philadelphia representing Protestant and Orthodox churches; the Roman Catholic Archdiocese of Philadelphia; and the Board of Rabbis of Greater Philadelphia.

To our knowledge, this will be the only national meeting of this scope dealing with First Amendment guarantees of religious liberty and freedom of conscience scheduled during the Bicentennial Year. The Conference has been officially recognized by the American Revolution Bicentennial Administration and Philadelphia '76, Inc..

The program will include addresses by outstanding scholars on topics concerned with the foundations, history, contemporary situation, and future prospects for religious liberty. Sixteen seminars will deal with a range of related issues.

Conference members will be 400 persons from Philadelphia and other parts of the nation--including scholars, clergy, historians, lawyers, educators, rights activists, community leaders, and others--invited to attend by the sponsors.

Aware of your interest in the area of Conference concerns, we extend to you a cordial invitation to participate. We believe the Conference will make a significant and far-reaching contribution to scholarly re-examination and re-assessment of religious liberty and renewed commitment to its support. We shall welcome your participation in this endeavor and look forward to hearing from you.
