TECHNICALLY SPEAKING...

A brief glossary of speaker technology

Crossover—A network of capacitors, resistors and coils that divide up the frequency spectrum so that each driver in the speaker system is operating in its optimum frequency range in phase with the other drivers. This assures a seamless transition of frequencies from one driver to the next.

Curvilinear—A conical driver shape which projects narrowly from the voice coil, then curves outward. This unique shape helps prevent the cone from flexing, thus limiting distortion.

Damping—The inherent ability of a driver to suppress its own motion when there is no electrical signal driving it.

Diffraction—The reflection of sound-waves off driver surfaces, cabinets or grilles. Reflected soundwaves interfere with the primary waveform, blurring or distorting the stereo image.

Driver—The part of the speaker system that mechanically transfers the electrical signal into moving air. Typically, each driver recreates only a portion of the musical spectrum such as low bass (woofer), middle frequencies (midrange), and high notes or treble (tweeter).

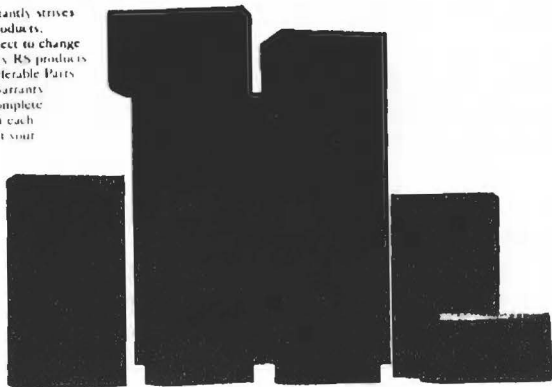

Imaging—The ability of speakers to accurately float a soundstage into a listening environment.

Planar—A driver having a flat diaphragm that vibrates in a single plane (such as the EMIT[®]) and is driven over the entire diaphragm surface area rather than from a central point. The most accurate kind of transducer presently available.

Soundstage—The aural recreation of the original placement of instruments relative to each other, side to side, top to bottom, front to rear.

Transient Response—The ability of the driver to respond quickly to sudden, sharp, short-lived peaks of volume. Good transient response gives clarity and musical accuracy.

THE HOLY TRINITY - SOORP YERORTOOTYOON

God has revealed to us in the Bible that He is one in three distinct Persons:

God the Father Hayr Asdvadz
God the Son Vorteen Asdvadz
God the Holy Spirit Hokeen Soorp Asdvadz

Each Divine Person of the Holy Trinity is equal in power, in greatness and in every way. They are separate yet they are one in a supernatural way that the human mind cannot fully comprehend.
